

Ahoy, Jeff & Colleen! Permission to come aboard?

WOW, what an amazing, jaw-dropping episode "Think Lovely Thoughts" was!!!

Okay, now is the time I have to admit I was totally wrong with my speculations about Rumple's father being a naval officer. But, to find out that Pan was Rumple's father just blew me away! (I actually yelled out-loud at my TV) With most TV shows having predictable scripts, it is not often that I am truly thrown for a loss, but I truly never saw that turn of events coming at all. I have to take my hat off to Adam and Edward for constructing such a clever story arc.

With the new knowledge of Pan's true identity, events in previous episodes with Rumple take on a whole new layer of meaning. For instance now I see why Rumple was SO very reluctant, even fearful, to go thru that portal with Bay. It went beyond his reluctance to give up his power. He'd already had a disastrous experience going thru a portal with someone he loved... his father. Makes more sense now.

And did anyone else besides me (knowing Pan was once a adult male) find it a bit, well, "pervy" that he kept Wendy as a young girl on Neverland for all those years?

This season continues to amaze and I look forward with great anticipation for the episodes yet to come. Happy Holidays to you, Jeff & Colleen and all the podcast followers,

Marilyn

P.S. Colleen, I just had to mention that you voiced my exact complaint with "Wonderland". I am also finding it completely "under whelming". It pales in comparison to ONCE. The only character that I find the least bit intriguing is Will Scarlet. I am still sticking with it but, unlike you, I really have not seen much improvement.

